Read the text below and complete the following task.

Fast food has become synonymous to burgers, pizzas, French fries, hotdogs, rolls and many more. It is more convenient as people have less time to spare for cooking food and eating it. Fast food helps them save their precious time and their inexpensiveness becomes an added attraction. Unfortunately, scientific studies have indicated that fast food has contributed to a rising number of health problems in children.

Children are more prone to the advertisement gimmicks of the fast food and are easily tempted to try out these products. Their easy to eat and lip-smacking tastes, allure them away from healthy vegetables and homemade nutritious food. As the foods contain starch, they do not make the child feel full, thus, leading to overeating.

The most common and the root cause of all the diseases in children due to fast food is obesity. According to research, 15-20% of American children in the age group of 12-18 years are overweight. Obese children spend little time in physical activity or sports, leading to a sedentary lifestyle which leads to mental stress and other emotional disturbances. Even if children are active, they tend to weigh more than their peers, who do not consume fast food. As mentioned earlier, these foods do not give the children a feeling of fullness. This makes them feel hungry most of the time, which leads to overeating and increase in weight.

-KERTAS SOALAN TAMAT-

Fast food has become synonymous with burgers, pizzas, French fries, hot dogs, and soft drinks. It is a more convenient option for many people, especially those who are busy and have little time to cook. Fast food also helps them save time and money. However, fast food is often criticized for being unhealthy. It is high in calories, fat, and sugar, and low in fiber and other nutrients. This can lead to weight gain and other health problems. In addition, fast food is often associated with a sedentary lifestyle, which can also contribute to health issues. Despite these concerns, fast food remains a popular choice for many people. One reason for this is that fast food is often more affordable than other types of food. Another reason is that fast food is often more convenient, especially for those who are busy. However, it is important to be aware of the health risks associated with fast food and to make healthy choices when eating. As the food industry continues to grow, it is important to find ways to make fast food healthier. This could include using more whole grains, lean proteins, and vegetables. It could also include reducing the amount of fat, sugar, and salt in fast food. By making these changes, the fast food industry can help to reduce the health risks associated with fast food and make it a healthier option for everyone.
